

Caroline Manning

My working life has been mostly in Early Years and Primary Education. This began in South East London, but in 2001 we moved to Suffolk where my work focussed on supporting children with social and emotional challenges and delivering training to Early Years practitioners.

My initial involvement with the Debenham Project was to seek support and advice when my husband was diagnosed with Alzheimer's. We were very grateful for the support and care we received, and when my husband died, it seemed only natural to want to give something back to the Project. As a former carer, I like to think I can offer support from our personal experience.
